MHAT MGGT HAVE BEEN

By Ru'ssel Hickfy
$\not \approx *$

Too soon arrived commencement day;
And high sehool years had passed away: One senior thought: "What have I done?
My cherished dreams I have not won."

As freshman young, with all at stake,
A part in sports he'd surely take,
But when each sport was drawing near,
He ehose to wait another year.

A sophomore now became this dub, With plans to try out for a club. These hopes of his were failures too; He did just what he had to do.

His junior days sped swiftly by,
And worth while things he didn't try.
A senior he became at last,
Reflecting sadly of his past.

Those longed-for years will be no more.
He thinks of lines he's heard before: "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, Most sad are these-'It might have been'."

Class History

By the slores of the great river, Stand the tepees of the red men; By the leaping, foaming waters Live the students of North Central.

In the midst of all these wigwams, Spreading outward like a fan, Stands the council house of Indians, Stands the mighty shrine of Knowledge.

Every day of ten long moons Come the red men forth to council; Come to learn the ways of wisdom, Come to Iearn the laws of life.

Come the sachems, tall and learned; Come the chieftans, stern and brave; Come the maidens, shy and blushing; And papooses, bold and noisy.

Four long winters pass about them; Four long summers, filled with sunshine. Then, as warriors, learned and mighty, They pass on to come no more.

Many foes by them were conquered, Vanquished in a thousand battles; Latin, math, and foreign language, History, physics, general science.

In these battles with their foemen
Some were lost-to follow later; Some were found who had been beaten, But to fight again and win.

With them were the fleetest runners, Were the men of brawn and skillMen who fought for tribal honors, And the smiles of the maidens.

With them, too, were men and maidens
On whose brows the laurels restedThose who fought with tongue and goosequilt, Not with feathered shafts of arrows.

One there was who won great honor As the wisest of her group,
One there was who was to journey
To the school of warrior chieftans.
Came the snow moon e'er they knew it,
Came the time that they must leave;
Leave the council house forever,
Count their coups and win their feathers:
Wear the feather of the warrior,
Wear the emblem of their manhood;
Snow white feather, tipped with crimson,
Sign of victory n'er their foemen.
So they met in convocation-
Chieftans, sachems, and the elders;
All were there to give due honor
To the students of the council.
There they listened to the singing Of the gifted council members; Listened to the words of wisdom Of the greater slaves of Knowledge.

There it was the mighty sachem, Wisest, bravest of the tribe, Gave to each the sign of victory; Gave to each the red-tipped feather.

Thus it was the green papooses Came to mathood in the council After four long years of struggleThus it was they gained the light.

And to ye who cometh after, Who take our places in the council List ye to these words of wisdom, List ye to the laws of life.

Play a littk, work a little,
To your studies give a thought. Life is flecting, Time too precious To have these four years come to naught.

Class Will

E, the class of January 1926, who have so commendably braved the storms of intellectual progress, hereby revoke all former wills and testaments made by us. While we are of sound and disposing mind and memory; but mindful of the uncertaintics of human life, we do make, publish, and declare this as our last will and testament, realizing that in a short time we will join the other spirits who have left the school.
Item 1. Florence Brown leaves her good looks and popularity to Sister Lois in the hope that they will help her to compete for George Stocker with Adele Nelson.
1tem 2 To Eddic Meyers we leave our hope that he'll play the role of papa as well in the future as he has in the past.
Item 3. Lucille Dodd leaves her dramatic ability to Rea Ruth Hurst. This will come in handy 40 years from now when she coaches the May Day Pageant at Horace Manm.
Item 4. We leave Germaine Kommers' good looks to Juliet Knce and Anna Hayes loping that they will divide them evenly. We also hope that they will use these to as good advantage in the future as Gerry has in the past.
Item 5. Hugh Donovan leaves his ability to do the Clarleston to Louise Melde.

Item 6. Knowing that Una Mac is hard up, we leave all of Margaret Carlson's dates to her.
liem 7 . We hate to do it, but it's a case of neces-- sity that we leave Mel Soln's affections for Melba to his new girl, Phyllis.

Item S. Kate Schellenger and Ed Curtis will their love for each other to Virginia McGuire and Curtis Stone.

Item 9. Quentin Coffin leaves his Cadillac sedan to Francis Blod. Try and keep it, Blod.

Item 10. Wayne Sommerville was going to will Georgia Mclarty to somebody; but he Iater decided that no one could quite take care of her like he can.

Item 11. The graduating football players leave their ability as stars to the sophomore team. Try and cultivate them, Zimmerman.

Item 12. Lewis Bostwick wills his title as "Romeo" to Joe Pearson. It may encourage Joe to find "Juliet."

Item 13. Captain Gildersleeve has decided not to leave the captain jinx to our football teams, so he will take it with him.

Item 14. Kemeth Arthur Minnick, alias James B. Acton, leaves his good looks to Joel Sleeth. Note: This is one on Kenny.

Item 15. To Bill Kcmp we leave the scholastic and roller skating ability of Howard Doust.

Jan. 26-Class day. Convocation for upper classment to see the class day exercises.

Jan. 28 -Commencement. But now "the melant choly days have come." Of course, we are glad that we're graduating, but somelow, to have to say goodbeye to all our teachers, and to think that we won't be kicked out of the library any more, nor have to stay atier school for skipping;-it sort of makes a lump rise in our throats. And we won't be in any: more locker room jams or attend convocation very oiten. And we won't be able to be on the football or basketball or laselall squad or on the News staif and we can't represent North Central in debate. And all these things come upon ths at once and we feel choked. Wee feel glad and yet we almost want to cry a little. lt's a fumy fecling!

TO TMIE FITLRE NORTII CENTRAL ＊$\ddagger$

0K WORK at North Ccintral，as the class of January 1926，is now complete．Here we have tasted life a little more filly： than in the past．Throughout the four years，we have found happiness；have hnown the joy of accomplishment；hate met disappointment，defeat，and victory．By the patient and melfish efforts of our instructors，we have added a little to our store of knowledge．T＇o them we will never be able to fully express our appreciation for the vital impressions they have left oll our characters and the constant inspiration they have been toward higher things．

We，like the members of every other graduating class，have watched North Central expand and im－ prove．Nhmmi have spoken to us of the changes they have noticed in the school and with pride in their voices they told us that the true North Central spirit still continned to live and flourish．And as we thought seriously of their words，we vowed that we would never do anything to bring discredit up m the school，or give anyone cause to be ashamed of it．

North Central will continue to grow and progress． It cannot stop；it must move forward．

To all those who come after us：We remind you of the traditions，the progress，and the wonderful ideals of North Central．The future is in your hands． You will determine just how much greater its power for good will lecome．It is a great challenge which we leave to you．But we know that you will not fail us．

Hail to the greater North Central！

FOLR YE．IRS ＊＊

Four years．They are gone．Wic have spent our allotted time here at North Central．And how short the time has seemed！

Four years from now some of us will be graduat－ ing from college．Some of us will be well along in our careers；some of us will have attained nothing． Wherever we are，whatever we are doing，the time will pass quickly，unless，of course，we spend it in the penitentiary：Life passes quickly；young men lecome old，and new men fill the places of their fathers．

Tlime，once gone，can never be regained．It must he used，or it disappears like the shadows of the night before the light of day．Too often men lave felt bitter regrets for what is past，and helplessly have said that they would give all they had if only they might live some incident over again．

Years will go on，and things will change．This is one of the laws of life．To us falls the privilege of deciding just how our time shall be spent．But only once．

Only rarely does anyone receive anything of value without secking it or without strivitg diligently for it．Strange enough，too，is the fact that its value is often proportional to the amount of effort expended in securing it，rather than to the material reward．

Anything worth seeking at all is worth secking whole－heartedly and systematically：The first re－ quisite of successful achievement is the establishment of a goal, or mark, which is to be the object of endeavor. In the past, many persons have failed to reach a worth-while goal because they attempted too many things, tried first this and then that, or liecause they stopped when the way became hard.
To accomplish your task, you must first make a carcful analysis of your potential powers. Can you speak well, write well, draw good cartoons, make attractive dresses, or conduct a business? What are you able to do best? Would you have the opportunity to progress to the highest degree of which you are capable, if you decided to follow the tine of work which looks most promising to you now?
Search well the opportmities; comsider samely your own abilities; set your mark high and never top until you reach it.

Only a comparative few receive the golden token, renown, or as it is more commonly and less accuratcly called, fame. It is one of the greatest trilutes which can be paid the life of a truly outstanding matn or woman. It is the final touch of approval ; the recognition of some great service performed or an extraordinary degree of perfection attained.

Our historics tell us of men whose names are immortal, whose lives will he known to the human race throughout its whole existence. Wonderful stories they are, full and overflowing with strange evemts, lattles won, failures, heart-aches, and those thingsoftel small which are stamped indelibly upon the characters of men who have achieved a higher tevel than their fellows.
Renown is not mere publicity: Nor is it comected with the name of the man who commits a sensational murder, although, unfortunately; a majority of the people are more familiar with the name of such a man than the name of a famous statesman.
kenown is not something to be sought for greedily: It is not found in this way. 'The man who labors mecely "to make a name for limself", or to do ermething just so that "his name will not be forgotten" shall gain wothing. Fame in itself is empty; hollow, nothing. But like the flag of our country, it : the symbol of something far greater.
het the person who would seek renown forget himself, his selfish ambitions, and pour out himself in hettering the lives and conditions of his fellow-men. He need give no thought to the recognition of his services or the rewards for his efforts. Renown is spontaneous.
$* * * * * *$
$\psi *$

Woven into the life of every one of us is the doctrine of idealization. We are ahways trying to to something as some one else, whom we consider the very model of perfection, has done it. We are like the litule boy, who, when asked how he wanted his hair cut, replied that he wanted it cut way back it the middlle, like the hair of a certain man whom he knew. The man was bald, but the boy, in his complete admiration, watted his hair to appear like that of his ideal.

Whether we are conscious of it or not, we are constanly imitating other persons. This is partly due to our desire 10 , he like them, and partly due to their unconscious influence. Very often the effect of other lives upon our own is permanent. lears after we have ceased to come in contact with some persm whom we knew well, we will find ourselves using some little mannerism or figare of speech which outr old friend was wont to use. It is one of the evidences of the eifect which his life had upon our own.
Wic, 100, are placing ourseties in the lives of others, for what we are will be reflected in a measure in their lives. Nothing that we may do or say in the presence of others will fail to have its effect, however small. This is especially trae in the case of those who are younger than we are. What a great responsibility is ours!
Character is largely formed by the environment to which the person is subjected. It seems strange that those with whom we associate, our friends, compose so large a factor in the formation of our individual characteristics and in the determination of our futures. Yet it is true.

Onr icieals and our friends are the patterns by which our lives are shaped. Too much care can not be used in their selection.

SEN゙SF OF HUMOR

Often there is just one thing lacking in !ife, which mars an otherwise splendid career. I! is the sense of humor.

Some of our greatest leaders have emplored this characteristic during the most stirring times anr country has ever had to pass through. No situation was too serious for them to be ready to refrest the:: minds for a moment with a little suttle humor fiet theirs was not a business of making humor, and they did not indulge in a deluge of jokes, "azen together as a composite mass which might be genul or bad. Their wit was the product of intelligent thought. It was neter marred ly cheapness, 1 , mt furnished the real satisfaction gained through relaxation from care.

The person who has a sense of humor, who dan make us laugh, and yet possesses the ability to consider things sanely when the time comes, commands oun respect and admitation at all times.
True sense of humor is the golden balm which eases the hardships of life. It is an essential to a complete enjoyment of the pleasures of life, and frequently is a potent factor in determining the progress of the individual.

History of the News

The Nurth Central News, as we know it today, is an entirely different newspaper from eight years ago when it was first published as a weekly edition. On September 25, 1917, under the direction of W. J. Sanders, the North Central News made its first appearance- a small five-column paper which was about one-half the size of the present publication. Since it was first started the News has made steady improvement. At various times during its career it has won prizes in contests entered by each of the high school papers in the United States. Before offering the News, North Central published a monthly periodical called the Tamarack, patterned after the traditional college year book. After the appearance of the News, this periodical was changed to a semi-annual book under the same name.

A1 this period in its history the News sold for 25 cents a semester and was printed by the Cole Printing company instead of by the North Central print shop, due to the fact that the print shop was not in operation until November, 1918.

Many very interesting facts may be found in the different issues of the News-facts which are probably more interesting to us now than they were at the time of their publication. Things which are taken as established facts now, were then important new events. One of the interesting amouncements in 1917 was the purchase of a 11 cw Ford car by Mr. Collins. At that time 78 pupils were candidates for graduation.
The editions published in 1917 and 1918 dealt mostly with war issues. Four hundred and seventeen boys were on the service honor roll, which was composed of all of the North Central boys and alumni conlisted in United States military service. In September, 1918, C. A. Borah became the new director of the News.
On November 12, 1918, a iwelve-page military number was published. Beginning with this publication, the paper was nearly filled with cuts. This policy continued until the issuc of January $14,1919$.
Octoher 28, 1919 marked the date of the appearance of the large seven-column North Central News which, in appearance, more nearly resembled the paper as we know it today: At that time it was announced that the band had reached an enrollment of 19 members. Today there are 77 students in the band.

In May, 1921, North Central won the Jester Cup in a national contest for the best humor column of any ligh school paper in the United States. The column written by Fred Marshall was adjudged the hest by the officials of Columbia university.
lvan Jenson lecame the new director of the News on September 21, 1921. The staff put out an extra Christmas edition for I)ecember 21, 1921. September 14. 1922, Miss Emugene Wyman succeeded Ivan Benson as faculty director of the paper.
On December 15, 1922, the North Central News won the first prize for having the best high school paper in the United States. This was the most inclusive contest of any held up to that time.

Sorth Central again won honors in the Central Interscholastic I'ress Association publication contest hield December 6, 1923, wheh was entered by all the high school papers in the United States. The papers were placed in different divisions according to the section of the United States from which they came. The News was rated the best for this section.

Lee A. Meyer then became director and in the issue for April 12, 1923, the News announced itself the winner of the first prize for a third National contest. This was another C. I. P. A. contest for the best headlines and make-up.
David Kirk succeeded Mr. Meyer as director of the News in September, 1924 and held that position until January, 1925 when he was followed by Miss Jeancte Malthy: Mr. Holart E. Rowlands is the present director. Miss Eleanor IIyslop has the distinction of being the first girl to hold the position of editor in chief of the News and Miss Marye Finney was the first girl to be column cditor. Both gitls were on the staff for the semester beginning, January; 1923.

This semester the News has won the distinction of heing adjudged lyy the Sigma Delta Chi fraternity, the best high school paper in the state of Washington.
It will be noticed that the News has grown from a comparatively commouplace paper to one of the lest in the Linited States. This distinction is not only a compliment to North Central, but to the city of Spokane as well. May the News continue its improvement always.

Genius Awakened

$* *$1 Charactir Stley by helfa Yiomas

 T IV.IS dusk of an October day, and the fading light stole in througla the old parlor window. The firelight from the dying emlecrs on the hearth cast weird, gloomy shadows on the walls of the room and ont the dim form in the hig, old arm-chair. Edward Norman was alone in the old house, alone with his melancholy thoughts. Nor was this a new situation; he was always alone; every evening he sat in the dark, brooding and thinking over the past and the present. As far as he knew; he would continue to be alone for years to come. There was no hope for a clange; there was no future.

These thoughts came to his mind as they had time and time hefore and he sighed. Why stay at the old home and try to repair it? The house was too old, ton far away from the life of the town. True, it was little more than a block from one of the paved streets of the city, but perched up on a cliff as it was, and near a railroad and several lumber yards, it stood completely isolated. It was, to say the least, modesiralle; no one but a person who had some tender memories of the place would live there.

Such a person was Edward Norman. He had lived there as a child, and all his boyhood memories were lound up in the old home. With his father, mother, and sister, he had lived a carefree life. His father had been a real musical genius, and the boy seemed to have inherited the same love for music. Ilis carliest recollections were of his father's pupils coming at all hours for their lessons. The older man had never been a close companion; he had always lieen occupied in that mysterious room where the childen had never been allowed. Yes, a great day it had loeen for Edward when he had gone for the first time into the room and had begun his study of music. After some instruction on the piano, the boy hat turned to the violin. It seemed to be his instrument.

He had masle rapid progress for a time, and had given great promise of being a wonderful violinist some day: Then lis father had suddenly died, and the loy hatd felt lost; part of his life, it seemed, had departed with his father. For even if the two had not been close companions, they had heen one in music. A little later his mother had built and furnished a new house in another part of the city; yet Edward had always considered the old place as home. When his sister had married and gone away and his mother had died, he had felt lost and alone in the world. Instinctively; he had sold the new house and returned to the old home.
A sorry sight indeed liad met his eyes that day two fears ago when he lad come back home with a suitcase in one hand and his violin in the other He liad found the gate off its hinges, the fence down, and weeds choking out every bush, vine, ant flower. What a desolate place! Nevertheless, Edward had entered the front door, placed his violm in a corner, and made himself at home. If had mechanically set to work righting things. Day after day he had worked in the yard and about the house: chay after day the violin had stood in the cornes nutouched. The man lad lived in a kind of dream What a heartless task it had been! For whom, for What had he been working? Of what use had leect his time and trouble? What had his life been worth?

Tonight these lurdens seemed heavier that eler, for Edward realized that winter was coming ouce more. It was possible to live alone through the summer when the days were long. But winter too well he remembered the last two cold seasons, the second more lonely and depressing than the firy What was he to do this winter?
lic roused himself and glanced around the room leeplessly. There where it had always stood was his father's piano. Then his eye fell on the violin leaning against the wall in the corner, the violin which had not been touched for so long. The desire came to play again upon that instrument once so dear to him. He impulsively rose from the oldel chair and hurried across the room. He opened the case. and with trembling hands lifted the violin. Tell derly; lowingly he touched the strings and luned them Then picking up the bow, he poured forth his miserable story in a heart-rending song of melancholy On and on he played; the shadows deepened and night came. He seemed to forget his lonliness, his fricf; the instrument in his hands was his compan ion. To it he told his sorrows of the past years. Cradually (for one's heart grows lighter with telling) the clond upon his mind and heart lifted; the roubied look upon his face disappeared and in is place was a look of joy and happiness. Gradually too, the song grew happier, and when at last the musician stopped, a different man stood in that oll parlor.

Now he knew what he would do. His violin wav his joy, his hope, his life. He had been lomely these years becanse he had forgoten his music. Now, just lefore he would have been lost to the world, he had found himself. He would study; again; he would get in touch with the only old friend still living in the eity-a former favorite pupil of his father. Together they would make musie wherever they went and gladden the hearts of men as only musicians can.

Edward laid his violin lovingly on the piano, and dropped again into the arm-chair. Slowly his excitement lessened, and a ealm erept over him. Suddenly a ray of light fell across the floor of the room. He looked out of the window just as the moun leamed down upon him. Silently he gazed at it, and thought to himself, "Just when loneliness and despair threatened to owerwhelm me, the One Who watches over all put music into my heart once more. Now shall my violin always express my thanks and praise to the Giver of all good and perfect gifts." So sat Edward Normant in the old parlor, thinking $n 0$ more of the past and present, but of the futurethe future full of hope and joy and musie. The moon kept on her course, and just as she disappeared past the window, she shed onc last, clear ray on the violin? lying on the piano.

| 0 |EW YORK was experiencing the first of its annual fall rains. An hour after sunset a fog had come up from the East river and had covered the city. Along the Great White Way the signal tower lights at each intersection flashed through the semidarkness, green-then red-then green again, skillfully guiding the traffic and averting accidents which were invited by the obseured vision and the wet pavement.

A man walked down Broadway; the collar of his raincoat turned up to protect his face from the chill mist. There was nothing singular alout the man except that he secmed to be in a hurry: Other pedestrians, attracted by colorful theaters, calarets and dance halls, stopped frequently, but the figure in the raineoat did not pause. Turning finally into a side street, the man proceeded for perhaps an hour. Then, without slackening his pace, he glanced swiftly about and disappeared down a forbidelingslooking alles: Groping along the wall he opened the third door and entered a dinge shop. A sign outside declared that it was Uncle Eiler's Pawn Shop.
A hawk-nosed old man, evidenty Uncle Eiler, shuffled forward to meet the newcomer, peering at him suspiciously:
"Oh, hello, Stromberg," he said in a whing voice. "Come right in. I didn't recognize you at first, Joham. My eyes aren't what they usec to be."
Johann, muttering an unintelligible reply, took off his coat and hat, shook the rain from them, and followed the old man into a room adjoining the slop. Old IIawk-nose closed the door and said ingratiatingly, "Well, Johann, what have you for me this time?"
Joham opened a small leather lag and dumped out upon the talle a glistening assortment of rings, stickpins, necklaces, watches, and chains. With a shudder he prushed them over to Hawk-nose and turned his lack while the old man shrewdly estimated the value of each piece of jewelry: Even a casual obserwer would note the sharp contrast between the two men. The face of Hawk-nose was lined with the marks that greed, jcalousy and its kindred sins had left lechind. His forehead and chin both slanted lack and a beak-like nose and sharp eyes completed his resemblance to a hawk.

Johann Stromberg's profile was fincly molded. The forchead was unusually high, and the nose was aristocratic. Ifis skin was white and the fingers that drummed nervously upon the table were tong and thin.
llawk-nose looked up.
"Well, Joham," he whined, "I can't give you more than $$ 1.300$ for these. Some of the rings are glass."

Without uttering a word the young man accepted the offer and having received a roll of bills, hurried out inte the strect. Is he left, he had heard Cincle Eilcr sat, "You are a clever boy, Joham. Keep it up and remember L'incle Eiler always stands ready to help you."

The loy frowned and bit his lip. If C'ncle Eiler muly knew how he hated it-this-this-stealing-.

IVhen his guest had gone, Hawk-nose eluckled and rubled his hands. The fool! The jewels were worth thrice the price he had taken for them. Linele Eiler would prosper so long as Joham transacted lustuces with him.
Mcanshile Ioham, ignorant of the fact that he had been cheated again, hurried down the dark strect and soon came to a shoddy-looking frame building in the horder of the tenement district. Rumnin' up two flights of dimly lighted stairs, he opened the door to his right. He paused a moment as if he were aitaid of what he might see, and then furned on the light. Everything was as he had left it. The casel with the lialf-finished painting, the bust in marlle which meeded polishing, the sketehes which eovered the walls-all were there. Johann tiptocel to a small, bare-looking cuphoard. $A$ violin and bow were there on the shelf. Gently he pieked them up and his eyes became dreamy as he fingered the strings and tuned the instrument. Then he swung inte the entrancing inclody of the Bluc Danube walt\%. It was his favorite. Whenever he was troubled he would play that greatest composition hy Strauss and it would calm him. Tonight he played it as he had never played hefore.

Cuisano Perlamni, master violinist, was on his way home after a might of glory: Only this evenmg he had appeared before an audience of the most critical music lovers in the United States. To be encored more than onee by them is perhaps the greatest tribute that can be given a musician. He had been called back four times to play the beautiful Blue Danube. Well could he afford to ride home in state, but now on the night of his trimmpl he wished to walk through the tenements from which he rose to fame. Suddenly Cuisano stopped and listened in upen-mouthed wonder. The sweet melody of the Blue Danule seemed to float down from somewhere alove him. Is he stood silent he realized that he was listening to a master-a supermaster who was playing the Blue Danube even hetter than he himself had played it. Tears came to his eyes as master and violin. in perfeet sympathy with each other, feclingly played Humoresque.

Then and there Cuisano determined to learn who the musician was. So in the midst of the I'oct and Peasant oferture, Cuisano slipped into Joham's room and listened silently while the artist finished and fondly placed the volin on the shelf. Sensing that another was in the room, Johann whirled and drew hack tereor-stricken. Then secing the violin the other held, he almost collapsed with relief, and cluched a chair for support.
"Excuse me," he stammered, "I am very nervous."
"I am sorry. My name is Cuisano Perlanini. I heard your playing and I wanted to get acquainted with you."
"Glad to know you. I am Johann Stromberg," said Johann.

The two sal down and Cuisano asked him questions concerning his work; the painting, the sculptnring, and finally his music. When Cuisano finally left late that night, they were fast friends, drawn together ly that which was part of the soul of each the violin. The next night and every night for several monlhs, whenever Perlani was not playing in pullice, they were together, deriving untold wealth from each other's companionship. Then one evening Cuisano reecived no answer to his knock and opening the door, found the room in order but his friend gone. I'erplexed, he sat down in wan for Johann had never before been gone at night. Cuisano waited patiently and was alout to go as Joham entered. When he saw his friend, Iohan's face blanched, then flushed.
"I didn't expect to see you," he lamely explained As he took off his coat, something dropped to the floor. It was a watch. Cuisano picked it up. He was about to return it to Johann when he remem leered that his friend had never carried a watch. Fxamining it more closely, he found on the back a strange name, "Phillip L. Arlington."
"Where did you get this?" Perlami asked quietly. For at moment the two looked at each other, then the repugnance of the thing he had been doing overcame Joham's delicate feelings and dropping his head in his hands, he began to sob hysterically. That crening he told the whole story to the only friend he could confide in.

From his boyhood days he had been of an artistic temperament. His ambition was to hecome a mas!er of all the fine arts, but this recpuired a great deal of money and his parents had but litte. He was not strong enough for hard manual lathor nor did he have any business instinets. The position that he finally found paid so little and took so much of his time that he could devote nothing toward the realization of his ambition and he saw his goal swiftly slipping from him. In desperation he had struck npon piekpocketing as a means of obtaining the necessary money and saving his time for the study of art and music. He had always hated it, but to give it up meant to give up his ambition and that he coud not do.
Cuisane sat silenty for some time after hearing the story: Then he said, "Johann, you have made a mistake--but it can be rectificel. You can soon go oll the stage and carn money to repay the people from whom you stole."

A month later, Johann Stromberg was advertisel to play in the great auditorium where musicians all make their debuts. On the night of his appenrance, the auditorium was packed to capacity, for the New York music lovers always give a new music:an a hearing.

When Johann first walked upon the stage he: seemed confused, and a few laughs greeted him. The 1 he forgot the people and became absorbed in his volin. While he played Blue Danube, several wer tures, and a minuet, not a sound could be heard in the auditorium. Then he bowed and a soft murmur of voies began to grow until the emire theate: was in an uproar! Iohann looked dazedly out upon the thousands before him. They were giving him an ovation-his ambitions were realized. He sudtenlv became conscious of the fact that they wanted more -that he must play for them. He raised his bow. Instantly the crowd hushed to hear him.

A feminine shrick broke in upon the silence. A 1ATRICK O'HARA was a typical young Trishman with the fiery red hair and still more fiery temper of his Irish father and with all the fervor of enthusiasm and youth embellished within his soul. Un this special day things at school were not going so well with Pat. Bud Marshall, the school bully, had called Patrick a "brick top." If there ever was auything which must be dealt with delicately where Patrick was concorned, it was his crowning glory: As he explainct one day in a iit of anger and exasperation, "Gosh, could I help those freckles and that hair?"

From the seat across the aisle a constant floond of "brick tops" and "freckles" found their way into Pat's history lesson.
"Closcly associated in the (lorick top) popular mind with the (freckles) contest about the (carr)t top) affairs of Texas was a dispute with (hrick top) Great Britain over the possession of territory in (freckles)"-It was beyond enduranee. Something lappened with such suddenness that it surprised even Pat himself, lut there he was with the frame of his shattered slate around Bud's neek slaking and sawing back and forth with the regularity of the ticking of a clock.
IIc gritted his teeth. "Take that-and-." But iortunately for Bud (and his Adlam's apple) Miss Rowan intervencel. She pushed "Freekles" into his seat. Her face was the very harbor of indignation and anger, lut nevertheless Pat thought for a moment that he detected a ray of merriment shooting from her eyes, but only for a moment. He knew that Bud and his teacher were not on the most amiable of terms. Could you blame Miss Rowan-lazy; arrosant Bud-but the one had to read between the lines, as it were, to even suspect that Miss Rowan did not like Burl. It would not have heen right if she openly. displayed her dislike. Miss Rowan was fair.
That night Pat stayed after school along with Bud. When at last after an hour or so of intensive thought (they should have been studying) they were given permission to leave. Bud went out the door like a shot, but Pat lingered a moment.
"It was my ole temper," he said apologetically to Miss Rowan. "Ma always said it'd get me in bad, and it did, I guess," he added rucfully.

As he left the building, cap in hand, he saw Bud and some of his cronies duck around the corner. There was only one thing that that could mean and so Pat took care to go the other way. Not :hat he was afraid, but Pat had something else on his mind. He knew it would come sooner or later, but he didn't feel just like fighting, not then. There was something on his mind heavier than Bud and his three cronies could possibly have been. He was cither going to get rid of those freckles and that hair or else lose that temper! He couldn't decide which was easier-one was almost as hard as the other-but he concluded that he would have to have time to think about it.
At dimer Mrs. O'IIara noticed his depression, but knowing her Pattie (if the boys only knew his mother called him that) as she did, she thought it best to culuestion him only when they were not in the presence of Dad O'Hara and all the little O'Haras. Accordingly she let the matter rest until she and the boy were clearing away the dinner dishes.
"What is it, Pattic," she asked confidentially, "Wou't you tell your mother?"
"Oh, it's nothing ma, really," he answered.
However, his mother knew hetter. It was unlike Pat, who was usually bubbling over with good spirits, to be melancholy. Mrs. O'Hara did not press the matter. Pat did not wish to conceal anything from his mother, hut how could he tell her that it was only his freekles and red hair! Her hair was red, but she didn't have insult added to misery. How could she menderstand?

Afterwards, in the seclusion of his own room, he settled himself with his "Popular Mechanies." Pat was interested in machinery; so much so, in fact, that he had chosen enginecring as lis profession. He turned the pages eagerly, one by one, searching for something especially interesting. He found it. In the advertising section, a glaring advertiscment caught his eye and held him almost spellhound. Here was his chance; he'd slow 'em yet. Again he read it cagerly-"Ladies, get rid of those unsightly freckles." Pat wasn't a lady; but it ought to work on a man's face (Pat had just turned fourteen) as well as on any woman's, he thought.
When fat went to school the next morning he elutched an elwelope tightly in one hand and held just as tightly 75 cents from lis small looard in the other. He was going to be sure of carrying out one part of his resolution, lut that hair-was it contirely hopeless? It couldn't be and yet-well, could it:

That week went by without any casuahies. But l'at sensed a subte presence. But was sure to do it sooner or later; he was just bieling his time, and when he did finish concocting something, l'at assured himself that all wouldn't be so well thennext week perhaps.
Wouldn't it ever come? Oh yes, eventually, but I'at was becoming worried. Then one night he was surprised and immensely relieved to find a small package, mopened on his hucath. Eagerly he removed the outer wrappings and found within a small jat.
"It smells nice," he said to himself after he hat 1 opened it. He read the directions carefully- "J!pary freely and rub in well just before retiring." Strai fletway Pat proceeded to follow directions and kett following them religiously for more than a weci. Each morning he consulted his mirror, anxionsly awaiting the disappearance of the have of his goung life. Yes, that big one on his nose died look ligherer and those little ones on his left cheek yes, they, ton secmed to be fading. Thlen one day he confronted his mirror squarely in a good light. Il . i on can do! Every frockle was just as as hefore. 1 few minntes later. Cream" went sailing ower the bati happened. To Master I'atrick ( 6,1 - O OH: . came a tiny; dainy, perfumed cowelope. There was only one thing that that could mean! Next to his concern about the irretrictable defects of his person bestowed upon him by Nohler Nature came his uncongucrable fear of the Femmine. This ton, was one of Mother Nature's gifts, hut one would think that the influence of three sisters would have ereated a difference in his point of view. On the other hand, imnumerable of the masculine become quite expert in matters where the femmine is concerned and whout the influence of even a single sister.
The next day the unexpected a.
But now all fears must be thrust aside. This was going to be Rosie's party, next Thursday night, at eight oclock on the lawn. Can't a fella ever lave any peace? No, his mother as much as told him that he must go. Unconsciously; Pat found himself thinking what a nice gerl Rosie was. She had prety blue eyes and soft, golden curls- she looked like yes, that was it-just as if she'd stepped ont of a fairy-tale. She was "awful" nice but-and Pat's eyes glated lbud was first in a line of many admirers. There was one possibility-maybe. Ifer affection for him was a little stronger than that whech she held for Bud. "But, oh what clance has a fella whih red hair and freckles?" he mourned regretfully: ". Incl what a sap I am!" he ardecd. Why even yesterday, he met Rosic and Bud on his way home from school and Bud was carrying her books! She was lovely 'ud asked him to be sure to come; 'nd he felt all hot 'round his ears and his heart flew to his throat, hindering fluent speech, and starmmen omething and departed hurriedly:
Thursday might arrived and Pat was glad at that comorrow would come and with it the thous That it had happened and wouldn't happen aga There was also a secret wish a wish closed wul his heart, that was so secret that Pat himself we hardly aware of it-that he might win Rosic's a proval; and a stronger and more apparent dest to do something to Bud's pug nose which b wouldn't forget for a while.
In a prim collar which was starched so stiff il it cut his neck every time he moved, a big la how at 1 is throat, and a new suit and new shous it spucaked, I'at made his appearance at Rosic's hop He noticed first with misgiving tugging at his hean that the place was literally swarming with sit. second, with ecngeance, that Bud had already o baged his hostess' antention; third, with envy, il Bud's person was melosed in the new long tronser suit which found so much favor with the boys, at of which l'at's mother didn't approve. l'at sente himself for a perfect evening of misery. The of reconciliating thought was that they were going sore ice cream, and perhaps, cake.
Bud was enjoving himself immensely, inasmuch he realized the significance of long trouserwhere the opposite sea was concerned, also, he kite the havoe long tronsers could play in envious mascu lime hearts, and it gave him great satisfaction. YeRosic was pleased with his wousers, and he fel honored with her admiring glances.

L'at would have leen pleased with the trousers had they been his own. And as the evening wore ons. 1 is temper waxed hotter and hotter. Occasionally he perecived in Burd's direction a derisive look a his short pants. Something is always taking the joy out of life!
" 1 lumph ! If that fellow weren't wice my size -." Everybody was intensely interested in a game of "Kum, slaeep, rom," and as Fiate decrecd, Bud, or the aggressive side, rushed pell-mell into Pat. Both were stumed for a moment, bint Bud was the first 10 resain his composure.
"Why, hello, "ister," he said with a trace of sarcasm, "It it you"."

(2)AKY WESTON was returning home at an early hour that Saturday morning. She stopped in front of a fashionable hotel, and as was her custom, she turned once more to glance at the lighted window far above her. "He is still there," she mutterel. "Will he never give up?" As if in response to the girl's question, the young chemist across the street vowed that he would never give up his work.

Mary Weston had good reason to worry. Since she had known Tom Churchill, she had been happier than ever before, and upon her finger was the newly placed ring of her young chemist. Yet she feared. Tom Churchill had worked for months on only he knew what, and when questioned about his work, he replied that it was all for Uncle Sam. Upon his table were bottles, glass instruments, and various chemicals, while over them Tom was working earnestly with his new discovery. Hollows around his eyes denoted his lack of sleep; nervous twitchings showed his anxiety and unrest. He watched his work with an eye that showed keen expectation. Now and then he muttered, "I've got it! I've got it," but each time he found a potassium cyanide or monoxide instead of the desired compouncl. He had dreams of riches and fame through his invention, but he was fast becoming poor. If he did not soon succeed, he must fail for want of money. In all that city of Washington, Tom knew of not one person from whom lee could seek aid.
Lucy Mann, Mary's trusted friend, had accepted Mary's invitation to lunch and the latter spoke of her fears. "Tom will not even confide in me. Oh, I am so afraid that something will go wrong."
"Don't worry. dear, everything will turn out all right," replied the consoling friend.
Several weeks later, a man confronted the war department at Washington, and was amounced as Mr. Thomas Churchill. This man immediately stated that he wished to sell his latest invention, "Deloria," to his goverrument. After much consultation and deliberation, he was rudely informed that no one desired his "Deloria," and that, as it might prove dangerous, he had better dispense with it. Where could he sell his invention? The only place that occurred to him was Europe, but to sell his product in Europe demanded money. He did not have it, nor did he know where to get it. For days he canvassed the city of Washington, without even daring to hope for success. The first week of November had come and as he stood before a theater, he searched his pockets. The first contained a hole. In the second he found fifteen cents and a jack-knife. Onc of his coat pockets revealed a memorandum book, in which he wrote, "November 3. I have reached the end of my string ; my invention shall destroy the next person who refuses it." Tom waited for over an hour there in front of the theater. A familiar face approached, and in an instant he recognized his old friend Richard Weston. It had been so long since he had met a real friend that he only stared at him as one who walks in his sleep. What instinct could have led Tom to act so queerly? Was it because he was sure of aid? Perhaps he remembered his written threat. Would his friend be the victim? That threat was a challenge to the world; he had spent his best days on his "Deloria," why should he bear the laughs and scoffs of the world, when he could so easily resent them? All of these things entered his mind, and then in obedience to the laws of weariness and exhaustion he fainted on the sidewalk.

Our inventor awoke as if to say, "What a horrible nightmare!" He recognized the surroundings; but for the life of him, could not tell where he was. He closed his eyes, as if that would aid him, and slowly recalled the street occurrence and the mecting of his friend. The chemist jumped to his feet as Mr. Weston entered the room. "Dick, Dick, how long have I been here?"
"Why only eight days, Tom. Are you feeling hetter?"
"Oh,- my head!" exclaimed Tom, as sharp pains flashed through his head with the rapidity of lightning.
"You fainted, and as you fell you hurt your head on the sidewalk. I'm glad you're all right, Tom. Mary will surely be glad to see you."
"Did you say it was eight days? Still more time lost. Dick, I have discovered something that will make me rich. You know your family is rich, and in order to marry into it I, too, should be rich; but Dick, 1 must take my discovery to Eturope, and that means moncy. You lnow I have none, but I will be able to pay back." Dick Wes on could not refuse these conditions when thew muant happiness to his friend and siste: be ieles he was ich. As for Tom, he was more torn com chicd. In a frw days he would be able to 'son For Fin ore. It was 1916 and conditions in the oth womld lambol favoralle for the selling of his invention. Indeed, it was not long before he arrived in London, but the I3ritish did not want his "Deloria." He had made his plans on the ship; yes, he would go to France and Italy and Spain if necessary: He was not in sympathy with Germany. He would go there last of all.
"Why don't they want it?" mused the American who was walking the strects of Madrid. The man had passed a trying period of two months, during which time he had appeared in l'aris and in Rome. He had left Paris just soon enough to aroid a warrant for his arrest. Here he was in Spain, but he had accomplished nothing, his money was almost gone again, and his only hope was Prnssia. He gained this nation, and as he marched down the streets of Berlin, he searched his pockets; just fifteen cents, the jacknife and the memorandum hook. With a sigh he threw all three into the street and continned on his way to the government buildings, where he presented his "Deloria" for inspection before the master-minds in the field of science.

For his invention he was offered a position in a laboratory at government expense, where he could further invent and discover, but he was compelled to refuse this. Tom Churchill was full of despair. He was penniless in a foreign country; he knew no one and had no friends. He could not master the German tongue, and he was left without even the means of returning home. Little did he realize that he might soon have to travel the same path in the service of his government. He was beaten, and in token of defeat, he sold his precious "1) eloria" to an agent of the Emperor, for scarce the price of a return trip to his native soil. He was free from the hurden he had heen carrying, and so he looked forward to the position in the Weston Manufacturing company which he occupied a month later.

Mary was delighted with the sudden change she found in her fiance, when Tom began to think of other things than his "Deloria." The New York society bulletin stated that the marriage of Miss Mary Weston to Mr. Thomas Churchill, a manager of the widely known Weston concern, wottd take place in June, 1917. But there came a sudden delay to the happy progress of the world. The United States declared war on Germany, which had heen conducting a solitary program of world domination. Mr. Churchill had decided. If he could not aid Lincle Sam scientifically, he would help through military lines.

Mary again consulted her trusting friend, after Tom's retirement from her father's business had heen made public. "I can't understand. Tom has refused to listen to me. He sairl that he had carved the way for world destruction, and that he must destroy the fruits of his folly by means of arms."
"Let him alone, let him alone, he'll be all right," replied the friend.
"But I'm so afraid, Lucy, that he did something terrible in that laboratory of his!"
Months passed. Tom was in France, fighting hard, but he was not the same Tom. He was trembling from worry, and his ill health was apparent.
It was the date upon which his wedding shonld have taken place. He was wondering if that marriage would ever come to pass, when he heard wild slouts, and saw a heavy cloud of ycllow gas come sweeping toward him. He recognized his own invention, his own "Deloria," and he knew that there was no escape. He recalled how he had sacrificed his time, his money,-his friends, and even his bride, hut he must give even his life to the terrible gas. He was frantic and hysterical; he rushed toward the clond, as if he would destroy it, but secing his friends and pals fall instantly, he stopped, then rushed further on. Yes, the struggle he had made, and the loss of everything for his "Deloria" had been hard upon his nerves, but with the loss of lives, and the destruction of human happiness, his nerves had been shattered, and he had gone mad. The gas came sweeping over him and as he breathed it. he gave it even his last words, "My Deloria!"

The senior class play, "Not So Fast," a comedy by Conrad Westervelt, was presented in two performances by two different casts. The casts for the play are as follows:
Henry Watterson Blake
Fred Stejer William Langford Kathrym Schellenger Florence Brown

Mary S:andish
Rose Standish
James Rarton Acton
Robin Standish
Silvester Vane Fay Fothergill
Araleclla 1, ucille Dodd, Virginia Porter Kenneth Minnick Hal Dixon, George Jemison Forrest Daniel, Don Engdah1 Hazel Ollson, Gretchen Luppert Margaret Carlson, Esther Anderson
"Not So liast" is an American comedy in three acts. It is sometimes called "The Blimp." Both titles refer to the slowness and apparent blundering of the principal character, Henry W'atterson Blake. As his name would indicate, he hails from Kentucky. Appointed guardian to two young women, he does all in his power to protect the interests of his wards and falls into many unusual and complicated situatons, made more serious by the fact that he falls in love with the elder sister.
The playwright has chosen for his theme the imteresting idea that a clever man is always watched, lut a supposedly stupid man is left unohserved, so of course he can put over litule tricks on his smant brothers.

All the characters deserve much praise for their ahle interpretation of their parts and too much credit can not be given Miss Hulda Schweer, dramatic coach, for her able direction of the play.
The scenery; which was entirely new, added much to the attractiveness of the play: The same scenery was used for the two different sets by clever manipulation. The living room seene of the first act was changed to the business office scene of the second act loy rearranging the units and changing the decorative details. The lighting effects were umusual, arranged so as to express the character of the different scenes.

I different system in conducting the senior dranatic class than heretofore was introduced this term by the dramatic coach, Miss Hulda Schweer. Before, those who did not obtain a part in the class play were dropped, hut in the new system each member of the ciass remained during the entire semester and each received a credit. Fiive one-act plays, not including the clats play, were presented by the class.

Those who had parts in the "Dear Departel" were Gerethen Luppert, Berva Stauifer, Virginia Forter, Wesley Ross and Hal Dixon.

Those in the double cast of the "Florist Shop" were: Weldon Schimke, Donald Studelska, . Dlben Schimke, Clarence S. Graham, George Jemison, 1)ean Barline, Itelen Woold, Gretchen Luppert, Alberta McI'hie and Kathryn Schellenger.

The two casts for the "Glittering Gate," given in the Christmas comocation, were: Forrest Daniel, Bill Langiord, Clarence S. Graham and Don Engrlahil.
The following students were selected ior the iwo casts of "Joim Owners of Spain": Helen Yeomans, Itelen Wold, Fother Anderson, Mary O Xeill, Cora Vaughn, Edna Cerhardt, Doreas Leslic and Alberta MePhic.

Three casts were selected for "The Mysterious Will." They were as follows: Lewis Bostwick, Bill I,angford, Kenneth Mimnck, Martin Burns, Delhert Giklersleeve, Fired Stejer, Lucille Dodd, Margaret Carlson and Florence Brown. This play was presented at the I'ep Carnival boverence Brown, Margaret Carlson, Bill Langford, Lewis Bostwick and Kemneth Minnick.

Those students who manifested the most marked dramatic ability in these one-act plays were given parts in the class play " Not So Fast."

Velma Gardner, Mona Miller, Ama Hayes, Maxine Johnson, Margaret Leraas, Lucia Whitenarsh, Mayllelle Martin, Marion LeFevre.

The sctting of the opera is in the town of Pilge l'ong. The plot centers around Fat Sing, a prosperous old merchant, who is tired of his life and decieles to disappear. Before disappearing, he arranges to bequeath all his property to the orphans wi his town, thus disporsessing his son, Sing Fong. The lusiness remains in the hands of Sing Fong, hut the profits go to the orphans. The exact terms of his will are mot to be made public for a year. Tamyu, a poor fisherman, has a niece, Lotus Blossom, whom he describes to Sing Fong as a beautiful doll, and ofiers to self her to him as such. This results in the meeting of Lotus Blossom and Sing Fong and love at first sight.
It length Fat Sing disappears and the people, thinking Sing Fong to lee the wealthiest citizen, elect him to the office of chici masistrate. IIe is pestered ly women who want to marry him, and at last he resolves to wed none except a wealthy orphan, thinking thus to end his troubles hecause there are none of that type in the city. The denoument of the story shows how he is agreeally and unexpectedly deceived in this and how he falls heir, after all, not only to the Fat Sing millions but to the idol of his heart as well.

Each of the cast played and sang his part very well. Much eredit for the success of the operetta hould be given to C. Olin Rice, musical director, Mis: Hulda Schweer, dramatic coach, and Miss Elsa Pinklaam, dancing eoach. The beautiful scenery and stage settings added much to the attractiseness of the production.

Art Department

$\not \approx *$

A areat sumber of students wonder where the caroons for the News, the drawings for the Tamarack, the posters around the halls at different times, and the stase scenery come jrom. Hid away in the lower north hall, north of the main entrance to the cafe, is the art department irom which all these symbols of art appear. This department has oxisted since the very beginning of North Central and is under the competent ditectorship of Miss Lillian Stowell. The department occupies three rooms.
The first class consisted of seven students who used a small alcohol burner to work with. This humer was replaced by a great number of cas jets. The enrollment in the classes has about doubled caclı semester, proving the popularity of this course
Miss Riker at the present time has charge of the special arts students. The students of these classes are iurnished with a complete set of all the necessary tools for their work, with the exception of a few small tools. The alsence of these small but necessary tools develops the ingenuity of the student ly his inventing articles to fill their use. The instructors believe that if everything is provided for the students, they will be too dependent upon their tools when they leave the school and will not be able to continue their study of this art hecause of the lack of the necessary articles.
Talent is not the principal requisite of the students of art, though naturally it is extremely beneficial 10 the hard worker. The students who sain the most and who are encouraged the greatest are the ronsistent pluggers who may possess little or no talent.
The art courses are elective and may be taken for two semesters or more. Special drawing, applied design and jewelry are included in the course. Special drawing gives a fonr year course in representative drawing perspective, Aject, isure, an 1 ammal (Hrawing) design, lettering and compostion. Pencil, crayon, charcoal, and water color are used. Art appreciation and the history of art are taught with the aidi oi a daulight projector

In applied design the girls are tausht how to apply it to painted and sessoed boxes, raitia haskets and dyed and wowen textiles. This year a handpower lexom has lioen added to the equipment.

In jewelry the stu lent learns all the fundamental procesocs m jewelry making - irom making a suitable design to stone-cutting and enameling. Silver is 15:ually used for jewelry, copper and brass for lowls, trays, look ends. lamp shades and so forth. Through this art the student attains care in planning and "orkmat ship, scnse of sood design, concentration, patience, persistence, and invention, as well as some attractive articles for use and wear.
The iollowing att studems sraduated from North Central specializitg in ant and are employed at the places named: Fred Marshall, is at the present cmployed 1 y Graham's in the art department drawing up the ads and doing other iniscellaneous work. Winiired Thurman is employed with Mrs. Odson, a well known interior decorator of this city. Howard Imhoif is working in stained glass in Thiladelphia. Ed Quigley, former staff artist of the Niorth Centrai News, is doing aft work for the Radford I'uhlication Co. in Chicago. Homer Ansley is doing commercial work in San Francisco. Freda Storm is teaching art work at the $\mathrm{V}^{\circ}$. of 11 . Herman l'ounds, Mande Kelly, John Lawson and Pauline Crowder are at the present time employed in Spolane in designing electrical features.

The art department has lieen of great aid to North Central. It is an interesting as well as instructive course and it would be letter if more students would follow this line, for it aids in rounding out their characters.

Forensics

Probahly the most unusual development in debating circles this semester is the organizing of the new Girls' Debating club. For several semesters the number of girls actively engaged in debating has been on the increase. This semester there arose a demand for a Girls' Debating club. On November 19 a meeting was called to accomplish the organization of the society. Katherine Kiesling was elected temporary chairman. A committee composed of Dorothy Crane, chairman; Dorothy Bevan, Frances Alderson, Blythe Pike, and Katherine Steclman was appointed to draw up a constitution.

A considerable number of students turned out for the preliminaries to the amual Medals 1)ebates. Among these were not only all the experienced debaters, but also a goodly number of new faces. While North Central is now well supplied with experienced debaters, many of them are graduating next Junc. The ranks must have raw recruits. On November 6 the preliminaries were finished. The question under consideration in the finals of the Medals Debate was, "Resolved, that the United States should recognize immediately the Soviet government of Russia." Those supporting the affirmative in the finals were: Kemeth Davis, Dorothy Cranc, and Katherine Kiesling; the negative: Ronald Phares, Esther Rossiter, and John DeArmand. The affirmative won the decision and Kemeth Davis and Katherine Kiesling won the medals. Both the wimers did splendid work in rebuttal. On the negative, Ronald Phare's delivery was especially effective and forceful.

The affirmative contended that we camot expert too much of any government before we accord it recognition and that recognition does not mean approval. The negative argued that the danger of Soviet propaganda in the United States outweighed practically every other consideration. The debat was very well prepared.
The next "Big League" delate looming (1) on the horizon was the annual triangular debate wheh was held on January 8. "Resolved, that the constitution of the United States should be so amended as to empower Congress to limit, regulate and pro hilbit the labor of persons under 15 years of age," was the proposition. On the evening of January : North Central, upholding the negative, debated Ifit. yard in the North Central auditorium. The Nurth Central team in this debate was as follows: Clinton McCracken, Ronald Phares, and John DeArmand. The negative North Central team argued that mos: of the children working do so because of absolute necessity, and that the Federal government cannot deprive them of their livelihood without providing some ineans for their support. The Hillyard team stressed the disastrous effects, mental, moral, and physical, of child labor.
At the same time another North Central team was arguing the affirmative at the Lewis and Clark auditorium. The North Central team was composed of Kemucth Davis, Katherine Kiesling, and Weldon Schimke. North Central put forward the idea that the proposed amendment merely provides for the cosperation of state and Federal government for the ctimination of an evil that the states alone camet control. The Lewis and Clark three argued that the states' powers shoukd not be interfered with and stressed the danger following a further centraliza tion of power in the hands of the Federal goventmcint.

Much credit is due to Mr. Charles A. Chandler for the able and thorongh manner in which he directed the interscholastic debates. While he develop. ed two first class teams, he did not neglect the coming debaters of North Central. Everyone was given a chance.

Thus endeth an eventful semester of foreusics

Organizations

Boys' Federation

IEERY boy in North Central is a member of the organization known as the Boys' Fedcration. The purpose of the Federation is "to promote those cooperative aetivities by which the boys of North Central high sehool may cultivate personal efficieney; competent leadership and social responsibility, and through which they may express an active loyalty: to the highest interests of the school and community and nation."
The organization is conducted in a demoeratic manner and all elcetions are carried out according to eivie procedure, complete even to registration and primary elections. To earry out the major part of the executive work there is an executive eouncil composed of officers elected by the boys, representatives for each separate elass, a representative from eaclı boys' club, and the heads of the three departments. The work of the Federation is largely done by these three dcpartments: the eommunity serviee, sehool service, and persomal service. Each of these departments has a number of committees, many with 10 or 15 members. Hence a large per eent of the boys are comected in sume way with the activities of the organization.
To best demonstrate the work of the departments, a list of the duties of the committees is given here. The community service department has eharge of the following committees: grammar school relations, which promotes interest in high school among the grade schools by means of speakers, a declamation contest, and the award of trophies for clampionship athletic teams; the philanthropic committee, which furnishes entertainment and donations for the children's homes and poor farm ; the civic affairs committec, which directs school elections, holds mock elections, and makes arrangements for boys' day. The sehool service department direets these committees: the fire squad, which searehes the building after fire alarms; the ushering, traffie, and tickets commintees, the duties of which are obvious; the Comanche Order of the War Whoop, which promotes organized yelling at athletie contests; and the paddle squad, which effeetively removes the temptation to throw papers on the sehool grounds and to smoke within two blocks of the school. The following committees are under the personal service department: The vocational committee, which secures employment for students and helps them to select the line of work they are to follow; the information committee, which works with the scholarship and welfare comnittees; the welfare committee, which sends flowers 16 sick fellows, and aids them in any other way possible; the icholarship committee, which provides students to tutor failing boys during their vacant periods; and the freshman committee, which helps the freshmen with their problems, and assists them in becoming accustomed to high school life. From this brief enumeration, the extent of the work of the Federation and its practicability may be readily seen.

A great deal of attention is given to the democratic procedure, which is planued after the civic form of govermment. Three years ago a new system of election was introduced. By this system, to receive a nomination for an executive office, a petition must lie filed with at least 50 signatures. The election is almost identical to the one held by the city: III students must register in order to vote. Primaries are held first and all nominees save two are eliminated from the finals. Nomines for the class officers are elected in the same manmer, except that only 1.5 signatures are required on the petitions.
The of ficers of the Federation for this semester were: 1'resident, Mehvin Sohns; vice president, Lewis Bostwick; clerk, Glemn Cross; imancial secretary, Francis Blod; treasurer, Clare I'ritchard. The department heads are appointed and they in turn appoint their committee chairmen. Each chairman then selects those who are to make up his committec. The deparmment heads were: Community serviee, Kenneth Davis; school service, Norman McGinty; personal service, Howard Doust.

Girls' League

The Cirls League of North Central, of which wery girl in school is a member, was organized in March, 1918. There had been no one girls' organzation up to that time to give the girls a common interest.
The purpose of the League is to teach every girl through conperative activities a sense of loyalty to the highest interests of the school, the community; and the nation.
. Miss Gibson, who has been the director since it was organized, has been the leader and mainstay: With the cooperation of the girls, she has made it the well-known organization it is today.
There are five departments into which the League has been divided; namely, the social service department, the entertainment department, the rocational department, the personal efficiency department, and the room representative department. At the begiming of the semester each girl is given the opportunity to sign up for the department in whiclr she wishes to work-with the exception of the room representatives, who are elected by the girls of each room.
The central council, the governing body of the Girls' l.eague, is made up of the four officers, the faculty and student department heads, the Dean of Cirls, the eight floor chairmen, the chairman of the dress standards committee and the chairman of the big sister committec. The duty of the room representatives is to keep all the girls informed about the work of the council and to take to the comeil the needs of each individual.
In recognition of the work which they have done, the girls are awarded places on the Girls' 1, eague honor roll. Bronze pins are given for placing two times, silver ones for four, gold ones for six and sold pins set with a ruby for those girls who have been on for eight semesters. Honorable incution is given for the alternate times.

Ouly juniors and seniors are permitted to join the social service department. This department aids failing students, does philanthropic work, and helps the social service bureau. At Christmas time, with the cooperatem of the Boss Federation, the department provides a program and gitis for the orphans at the Spokane Children's Home. Ardith Mellinger and Mis: Helen Mclouall are the stulent and faculty kaders of this department.

Tlac entertainment department, directed by Elna Harmon and Mis: Beriha Bochme, has charge of all social affairs sponsored by the League. Each semester a frohe is given ior the big and little sisters, a vaudeville party for all the girls and a tea for the girls and mothers of the senior it class. This semester the department also gave 2 radio program.
The personal efficiency department covers all girls' athletic work of the school. Girls who are interested in sports and hiking join this branch of the Leaguc. Miss Elsa Pinkham is the faculty advisor and Mable Mahoney is student director.
The vocational department is headed by Helen Yeomans and Miss Inis Williams. The department does all of the clerical and vocational work, and sends delegates to I'ullman each spring to the Vocational Conference.
This semester the dress regulations were revised and the following standards were adopted:

We, the girls of North Central high school, desire to carry out the ideals of simplicity, modesty and good taste in our dress, and to appear at school only in lusiness-like and suitable clothing. Therefore, we suggest the following as proper for school wear:

1. Sport dresses, simple dresses of pongec and tub) silk and blouses or middies and skirts.
2. Inexpensive and serviceable hose which should be worn with their tops well alove the bottom of the dress.
3. Plain, oxfords, simple low-hecled slippers, sport or strect shoes.
4. We believe that satin slippers, high heels, silk and velvet dresses, slecveless dresses, extreme styles. clothing that is not clean and exiravagant clothing in general are not in the best taste for the high school girl.
5. The excessive use of cosmetics and the use of class rooms, the cafe and street as a beauty parlor are also practices which we think should be promptly discouraged.

Ghrls' Leaguf: Central Council-Jessie E. Gibson, Director; Mildred Mithell, President; Leali Lufkin, l'ice President; Bertha Callin, Secretary; Berva Stauffer, Treasurer

The supreme governing body of the Girls' League is the Central Council. It is composed of the four officers-the president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer, the four girl department directors, the four faculty directors, four chairmen and four assistallt chairmen of room representatives, a chairman and assistant chairman being elected from among the room representatives of each of the four floors: the chairman of the Dress Standards committee, the chairmans of the Big Sister committee, and the Dcan of Girls, Miss Gilson.

Regular meetings of the Central Council are licld every Tuesday in each school month. Special meetings can be called by the president, the Girls' Idvisor, or upon petition of ten Council members.
The duties of the Central Council are to transact all business of the League, execpt that which it deems advisalile to submit to vote of the memerership at large ; to coordinate the work of the departments and interpret their functions; and generally to perform such duties as come within the jurisdiction of the League.

The Radio club is one of the most enterprising and energetic clubs that the sclool possesses. Ever since its organization five years ago, it has been doing its utmost to uphold the name of the school and its activities. The club members have always been willing and ready to put on programs of school talent and educational programs, as well as play by

The club has received much favorable comment from school officials, and also from people in the middle eastern states, and in this way the members have earned a name worthy of themselves and of their school.

The Orchestra
$\star+$

For many years the North Central orchestra, mider the direction of C. Olin Rice, has leen a leading factor in the success of school entertainments and is one of the outstanding organizations of the school. Owing to a lack of space in the orchestra pit in the anditorium, the membership had to he limited to forty-four. During this semester they furnished the music for the operetta, the class play; appeared in a special orchestra convocation, and according to tradition, they played at the baccalatureate and commencement exercises. The organization meets every Wednesday afternoon. The members receive one-fourth of a credit for eacl semester's work.
The members of the orchestra are: First violinLeah Lufkin, George Graham, Alberta McPhie, Gladys Secley, Lowry Bennett, Irene Burke, Louise

The Band

One of the busiest and most successfinl semesters during its history has just been completed by the North Central band with a membership of 77 pieces and a marching band of over 70 pieces.
Under the direction of L. C. Bradford, faculty leader; Everette Nelson, student hand master; Har old Anderson, manager; and Lewis Bostwick and William Langford, drum majors; the band has made over 30 appearances. It appeared in eight convocations; six parades including the Hallowe'en, Armistice, and Serpentine; six games including the Haskell and Thanksgiving games, and made a trip to Garfield, Wash. The pep band, a special unit of the main organization, made five appearances and the sextette, one appearauce.

THINGS THAT NEVER HAIPPEN * $\ddagger$

By Martorif: Dri:W * $#$

A thoughtinl boy was Johmy Brooks; lirom the ripe age of five He was devoted to his books, To him they were alive. Because he studied hard and late, From grade school John did pass; His eiforts he did not abate,
He was the best in class.

Hts thonghts now centered all on high,
He thought the summer dreary;
Not 'till September days drew nigh,
Was Johmy bright and cheery:
At last he was a freshman proud,
Ilis days were filled with joy;
With genius he was thonght endowed, This very studious boy.

It was not long 'till Johmiy found He was a sophomore bright;
Ilis feet then fairly left the ground, IIe studied day and night.
And now rolled past another year,
A junior was young John;
No lengthy lessons did he fear,
'Twas such he loved to conl.

Well-known now grew our hero's name, Of all A's he could boast;
Farspread indeed was Johmny's fame,
'Twas told from coast to coast
Of how this boy, a senior now, In lessons took delight;
Greatness was written on his brow, He was a noble sight.

A graduate with honors high, He was not yet content;
For greater knowledge still, he'd sigh, To college then he went.
To many such he went in time, And wandered o'er the earth,
Secking the schools in every clime, Ind testing their true worth.

But now at last poor John is seen
In vain for schools to call;
He's trod on every campus green,
In fact he's tried them all.
As Alexander wept to win,
So John for more schools cried;
He pined away; grew sick and thin, And then at last he died.

Thus endeth now my sorry tale,
This record of great woe;
Please du not study 'till you're pale, To many schools don't go.
Thor:gh education is a need Of folk in every clime,
To John's sad plight pay instamt heed, Aud guit while there is time.

CALI'ING the Lewiston and Hillyard high school foothall teams; tying the Colville, Walla Walla and Washington gridders, three of the strongest high school elevens in the Northwest; losing to Yakima, Gonzaga and Lewis and Clark, the ' 25 Indian football warriors, considering the loss of their mainstay, Captain Gildersleeve ; and made up almost entirely from green material, went through a successful season.

Through graduation North Central lost many of its stalwart players and with but four men returning out of the twenty-two that made up last year's first and second teams, the Indians faced one of the hardest seasons they had for several years. With Coach Zimnerman at the helm, the green material was worked into a playing team that despite its lack of weight and experience, played football.

North Central placed two men on the all-city selections in Lamson at end and Soike at center. Lamson was also placed on an all western Washington eleven picked by Coach Sahin Rich of Walla Walla.

Coach Zimmerman will have nine lettermen for a neucleus to build his 1926 team. The men are: Clare Pritchard, halfback; Mentor Dahlen, halfback; Harolel Haynes, quarterback; Dan Dech, tackle; Jasper Moore, guard; Wilson Schulthess, fullhack; Leonard Soike, center; Howard Stevens, quarterback; Denton McBean, halfback. With the exception of Pritchard the lettermen have had only one year of experience.

Clarence Zimmorman opened his second year as foothall coach at North Central on September 20 ly taking his Indians north to play the strong Colville eleten. Only four lettermen were in the North Central lineup while Colville boasted a team composed almost entirely of experienced men. The game was played on a muddy- field with the result that both teams played straight football throughout the entire contest. Through four periods the two clevens battled, with neither team able to adrance the ball any closer than their opponents' 20-yard line. The game ended the first of many scoreless tie games that the inexperienced Indian eleven was doomed to play:

Vicious line plunging by Gildersleere, Indian captain, and long punts by Pritchard aided North Central in keeping the ball away from home territory:

Dan Dech, star on last year's frosh team, showed much promise as a future lineman.
Captain Buckley led his Colville team-mates to within striking distance of the Red and Black goal time and again only to lose the ball on downs as the North Central gridders held. Exely, noted Colvilic ball toter, failed to gain consistently through the line hut was a tower of strength on the defense.

WASHINGTON GAALE:

* *

Arriving in Spokanc October 4, the Washington high of Portland completed their two-game schedule with the North Central Indians. The Colonials were still smarting from their $3-0$ defeat at the hands of the Iudians last year and with a team composed entirely of experienced men were contident of going home with the long end of the score. But there was to be no score. The Portland eleven threatened to score throughout the game but lacked the punch to break the stubborn North Central defense.
The entire first half was played almost exclusively in Indian territory. After an exchange of punts at the beginning of the game, Washington worked the ball down to the Indians' two-yard line for downs. Four times through the line found the ball just six inches from the goal line. North Central took the ball and Pritchard punted thirty yards out of lounds. Washington started another drive that ended on the Indians' five-yard line.
The first two periods were played in this fashion with the teams battling from one end of the field to the other. North Central made first and ten when Captain Gilderslecre smashed through the Portland line for 12 yards. It seemed as though this put new life in the team, for they started a steady march for a touchdown, but the half ended as the Indians tore off another ten-yard gain.
Early in the third period a 36 -yard penalty was inflicted on the Colonials when their tackle was put out for slugging. It looked as though this was the Indians' chance to score. Gildersleeve hit the line for four yards. Pritchard skirted left end for three yards but failed to gain again on the same play. Pritchard then dropped back to placekich. The ball was snapped to the quarterback, who fumbled the ball and North Central's chance for a score went glimmering.

The fourth period legan with both teams iighting desperately to win. Time after time Washington high threatened to score but the Indians' defense suffened at the critical moment and the Colonials lost the ball on downs. In the last guarter the game was played entirely in Indian territory: North Central showed a strong defense, but a weak offense. Gabricl was the shining light for the visitors, while Captain Crilderslecve was the outstanding star of the game. He was in every play on defense and on offense he averaged four yards every time he carried the hall, an exceptional accomplishment for a fullback

October 20 saw the North Central eleven weakened considerally by the loss of its captain and fullhack, Dellert Gildersleeve, and facing the strong Gonzaga high eleven.
Gonzaga mate the first score that hat ever been made against the Indians in Coarh Zimmerman': reign of two years when Captain Plarmer shot across the goal line following a fumble by the Redkins on their own 30 -yard line within three minutes after the start of the game. End rums and line plunges by the North Side backs placed the hall within scoring distance and 1)ahlen was sent over for the tally:
The teams were tied at 7 up at the begimning of the second quarter but a blocked punt and long end suns gave the Bullpups two more touchdowns and the score stood at the end of the half, Gonzaga 21. North Central 7.
Another blocked punt at the begiming of the second half gave Gonzaga another chance to score, which they promptly did, giving them a total of 27 points. Coach Zimmerman rushed in sulstitutes in an effort to overcome the large score against North Central. Led by I'earson, brilliant sophomore halfback, the Indians scored a touchdown in the last few minutes and narrowly missed another when the gun sounded with the Indians in possession of the ball on the Gonzaga 5 -yard line. The final count was Gonzaga 27, North Central 13.

Evenly matched, the North Central eleven and Lewiston's gridders battled to a $6-0 \mathrm{win}$ for the Red and! Black warriors. Both teams displayed tlashes of a brilliant offense and a strong defense, and throughout the game it was a toss-up as to the winner.
The first two periods were scoreless and the teams fought from one end of the field to the other with nether leam having the final punch to score.
The third quarter brought the first and only score of the छame when North Central took the ball on Lewiston's 40 -yard line and with a series of end runs and line bucks carried the ball to the 22-yard line. A short pass to Dahlen was completed and he ran through a broken field for a touchdown. North Central failed to consert the try for point.

In the third quarter the II a-hi team began a rally and plunged down the field only to lose the ball on downs on the Red and Black 10 -yard line. Is usual, the second team foothall string, unwept and unsung, bore the brunt of whipping the first team men into condition, and beyond two outside grames, confined its activities to facing the regulars, each day throughout the season.

In their first outside game, the second tean warriors went down to defeat, 14 to 0 , at the hands of the Cocur d' Alene high school eleven. The Indians never threatened and never had the ball inside Cocur d'Alene's 20-yard line. Both lines as a whole functioned well and were able to stop the opposing attack, but at times the I.ake City backs would get away for long gains, and twice went over for at touchdown.

In their second game, the Indian seconds won a 13 to 7 victory over the Vera high school eleven. The team played real football in the game, showing good form on defense and working smoothly in ufferse.

The second team squad deserves much of the credit for the scason's football success, for it was they that gave the first team men the chance to put the football education, dealt out by Mentor Zimmerman, into actual practice.

With Captain Joln White breaking the tape followed by scven of his team-mates, North Central won the triangular cross country race from Lewis and Clark and Hillyard, over the Mission course, with 18 points to Lewis and Clark's 37 and Hillyard's 65. Eight of the first nine men to cross the line wore North Central colors

Starting the season with four lettermen, John White, Kenneth Ryan, Wentzel Hansen and Orville Dunham, as a ncucleus, Coach J. Wesley Taylor built up the winning team from one of the largest turnouts for the sport in the school's history:

In the past the anmual cross country race was a dual competition with North Central and Lewis and Clark competing, but this year Hillyard, a contender in city high school sport competition through its amexation to Spokanc, entered a team.

The first 10 men finished in the order named: John Whitc, captain, N. C. ; Orville Dunham, N. C.; Charles Gciger, L. C.; Victor Schatz, N. C.; Kenneth Ryan, N. C.; Hill Johnson, N. C.; Paul Binnard, N. C.; Wentzel Hansen, N. C.; Gilbert Wollin, N. C.; Clarence Simpson, I. C.

High school fellows have always known that Eggerts is headquarters for snappy footgear. And whenever there's a special occasion-like graduation-they come to Eggerts for correct footwear.

But our latest imnovation is for the ladies-pumps and oxfords. And our young ladies' footwear carries just as much style and snap as our footwear for young men.
